In general, you should start with your primary care physician for all your health needs. Since this person will be your go-to medical partner, it's important to find someone you're comfortable with. When the same person sees you over time, he or she learns important information about you – the whole you – that can be invaluable in keeping you healthy and catching problems early. The more you feel you can trust and be open with your doctor, the better care that provider can give you. And should you ever need specialized care (for example, for a heart or musculoskeletal problem), your primary care provider can recommend the right physician and help coordinate your care.
